Public Transportation Information

The information in this document is for individuals who have accepted a job offer through the Workforce Recruitment Program (WRP) and need public transportation to and from their workplace.

Begin with an online search of the work locale. A centralized site that provides transportation information for cities in the United States is www.PublicTransportation.org/systems/state. A clickable map will take you to transit options in the area of your choice.

Further questions should be directed to the Human Resources Office for the organization's work location or to the hiring manager. Participants should become familiar with the transportation route prior to arriving for work on the first day.

In the Washington, DC metropolitan area, the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority (Metro) website www.wmata.com/Getting_Around provides information about bus and train routes, fares, how to buy bus and train passes, and how to plan trips.

For information on accessibility within the Metro system, go to: www.wmata.com/accessibility. This site also includes information on a reduced fare program for individuals with disabilities.

In addition to Metro, there are other public transportation providers in the Washington, DC region that operate specific transit routes. They can be found at: www.wmata.com/getting_around/regional_transit.cfm.

In many metropolitan areas, federal agencies offer transit subsidies to help employees pay for public transportation. Individuals should ask their organization’s local Human Resources Office if they qualify.
